SURPRISE WITNESS RESUMES STAND IN HAUPTMANN ALIBI

Swedish Carpenter, However,

Questions Asked

SAW DEFENDANT ONCE

All Lawyers Gather About
Judge for Long and Earnest Talk

By James L. Kilgallen
(U. S. Staff Correspondent)

COURT ROOM, FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 31.—Elbert Carlstrom, 27-year-old Swedish carpenter, who as a surprise defense witness gave an alibi for Bruno Richard Hauptmann as to his whereabouts the night of the kidnapping, resumed the stand today for further cross-examination when Court was convened.

Carlstrom swore he saw Hauptmann in the Fredericksen restaurant in the Bronx, where Mrs. Anna Hauptmann was employed as a waitress, between 8:30 and 8:50 p. m. on March 1, 1932, the night Hauptmann is charged with murdering the Lindbergh baby.

Carlstrom said he remembered the occasion because March 1st is his birthday.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz walked to the bench and talked in low tones to Justice T. W. Trenchard. Meanwhile, defense lawyers went into a huddle. Soon all the lawyers were up there around the bench talking earnestly to Justice Trenchard. It was reported the defense was making a protest against "intimidating" the defense witness. When the conference broke up, Justice Trenchard ordered the cross-examination to proceed. No announcement was made concerning the side-bar conference.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz began his interrogation.

Q. You testified you saw the defendant only once, the night in the restaurant in the Bronx, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. You said you went up to the Bronx that night to see a young woman named Esther, right?

A. Yes.

Wilentz asked Carlstrom if he saw the girl that night.

His first answer was that he did, then he quickly reversed himself and said "I did not." He explained he arrived too late at her home. The Attorney General reminded the witness he had said he lived at that time in an empty house in Dunellen, N. J., and Carlstrom said that was correct.

Q. What time were you at the Fredericksen bakery in the Bronx.

A. About 8:25 p. m.

Q. Where did you go when you left there?

A. I don't know; I think I went to the movies.

Q. Where did you go then?

A. I went to Brooklyn.

Q. What time did you get there?

A. About one o'clock in the morning.

Wilentz asked where he went in Brooklyn.

Carlstrom hesitated. Wilentz insisted he answer. Defense Attorney Reilly objected, telling the Court the answer might incriminate the witness. The Court told the witness he must answer the question or tell if it would incriminate him.

Farm Products Show

WARING, GOLD MEDAL

Poultrymen from Bucks County made an excellent showing in the State Farm Products Show which ended a few days ago in Harrisburg.

The grand championship banner was brought to Bucks County, the banner being awarded on the point system based on the total number of dozens exhibited, and likewise quality of exhibits.

Bucks county had 131 dozens exhibited and Lancaster county, always a keen rival of Bucks county, had 187 dozens, but the quality of the eggs brought to the show from the Bucks county farmers was by far superior to that of the Lancaster county farmers.

One Bucks county producer, P. A. Waring, Solebury, had the distinction of having been awarded a gold medal for exhibiting the grand champion dozen of white eggs, this having been one of the highest honors conferred at the State show.

Other Bucks county winners included the awarding of a silver medal to Norman Kriebel, Doylestown township, for placing first in the commercial white one dozen class.

The Bucks County Producers' Co-operative Association placed first in the commercial six dozen white class and first in the commercial six dozen brown class, the co-operative exhibits having been selected by John Dugan, head candler for the association.

Cash prizes ranging from $1 to $2 and ribbons were awarded the Bucks county exhibitors.

LEARNING HEREDITY SECRETS FROM TWINS SET TO PLAYING WITH BLOCKS SCIENTIFICALLY

Soviet Laboratory Yielding Facts Concerning Child-Raising

(This is the last of a series of articles dealing with extraordinary experiments in various fields made by Soviet scientists.)

By Lindsey Parrott
International News Service Staff Correspondent

MOSCOW, Jan. 31.—(INS)—In a quiet room on a Moscow side-street 20 young boys and girls play solemnly with blocks.

Keen-eyed attendants watch them, making a note from time to time. From time to time their sets of blocks are changed and they are given a new stack of plans of castles, houses and geometrical designs. These they copy with their many-sided bits of wood.

They are no ordinary children. The noise and bustle of an ordinary nursery are absent from their quarters. The casual observer notes their similarity in their jumper uniforms, slippers and short socks. Look closer, and one sees that all fall into pairs.

They are, in fact, 10 pairs of identical twins—each couple born from a single cell and perfectly alike both in physique and (theoretically at least) in mind.

And through their quiet play, scientists of the Soviet Union are attempting to solve, in modern, experimental fashion, the ancient philosophical problems of heredity and environment.

The room where they play is the nursery of the Medico-Biological Institute. Principal director of their games is an American, Dr. Solomon G. Levi, head of the Institute and associate of Dr. Herman J. Muller, from the University of Texas, and now working at the Genetics Institute of the USSR. The twins' games are America's contribution to Soviet Science.

The theory of their play is simple. Take a pair of twins, similar in heredity. Train one in certain fashions—the other in a different way. After some time it will be plain how training, or environment, has modified the original similarity.

Five pairs of Moscow's twins are in a "passive" group, so-called. The patterns given them to build mark out an individual space for every piece of wood. To put each block into its proper place is simple observation. They copy off the plans mechanically.

The other five are "active." Their blocks are just the same but the patterns given them are solid, geometrical designs. Each child must work out for itself how each block must be used so that all fit in place, with none left over, like a jig-saw puzzle.

The training lasts three months. Then, at recurrent intervals, tests are made to determine how the "active" twins surpass their "passive" fellows in the subject in which they have been trained—the analysis and construction of geometrical patterns.

Six months after the course, "active" twins can copy and even reverse figures which "passive" children scarcely can construct mechanically when the space for every block is marked.

Asked to face the teacher, copying the movements of his hands, right hand following right hand and left hand following left, the "active" twins came through with flying colors. The "passive" merely "mirror" the instructors' movements, left hand following right, and vice-versa.

The active twins have been conditioned by environment. The passive twins have not.

There is more than pure theory behind the experiments with twins. The Soviet government demands practical results from its scientists. More than one new development in child training may come from the Institute some day. Meanwhile, even the block experiments are expected soon to lay a basis for the construction of a whole series of "scientific" toys, to be recommended by the Institute.

Toys which scientifically condition the young proletarian to grow up an engineer—a builder of tractors, railroads and bridges which the country needs—with an ingrained knowledge of mechanical forms may replace the dolls and tops and picture books of the ordinary rough-and-tumble nursery.

And there are other problems to be solved. Whether treatment by violet rays is useful in cases of rickets has been debated by physicians.

At the Institute, a pair of identical twins each suffered from the disease. One was given the violet ray treatment, the other was not. The twin treated appeared to improve, at first. But, eight months later, there was no difference in the children. Violet rays, is the conclusion, are of scant value, probably.

Similar experiments are made with various types of diet and, among the older children, with educational methods. Children who are taught to read by learning whole words at a time quickly surpass those who learn the ABC, it has been found. But those who learn the alphabet catch up in later stages and eventually forge ahead.

Today, tests are afoot to determine to what extent diseases—diabetes, stomach ulcerism, cancer, asthma, high blood pressure and dementia praecox are caused by environment and to what extent by heredity. Diet, training and environment can prevent or alleviate such ailments, perhaps.

A generation can be built, perhaps, by wooden blocks.

MENDS PIPE, SHOULDERS DEEP IN ICY WATER

Langhorne Man, Alfred Simpson, Does Heroic Piece of Work

FOR PUBLIC'S COMFORT AT EDGELY SCHOOL

LANGHORNE, Jan. 31.—When an inch and a half pipe broke and threatened to flood the streets and cellars of the De Haven avenue section of South Langhorne on Monday morning, the water company was faced with the question whether to flood the streets and cellars with ice or whether to shut off the water and run the risk of exploding heating plants and boilers already strained by the frigid weather.

Alfred Simpson, a young colored man, responded to a call. The pipe was uncovered and for over 40 minutes with a temperature of four degrees above zero, Simpson worked up to his shoulders in the icy water to cut and thread the broken pipe, and screw on a valve to hold the 85-pound pressure. Though the tools froze to his hands and the pumps froze that were keeping down the water, Simpson never stopped until the job was done. In an interview later, when asked if he does much of that type of work, he smiled and said, "We'll get plenty of it if this weather keeps up. But we don't mind it if only the people would say a good word once in a while to show if they do appreciate what we of the water company, and others of the gas and electric companies do to make their life pleasant and comfortable."

Superintendent O. T. Stompler, of the Langhorne Spring Water Company, also commended young Simpson on his meritorious service.

Over 200 People Attend President's Ball Here

In a gala setting of the national colors, last evening, more than 200 men and women assembled at St. Mark's hall for the President Roosevelt ball. There they danced to the strains of music provided by an 11-piece orchestra, with the receipts of the function being used for combating the dread infantile paralysis.

Seventy per cent. of the profits will remain in this area for rehabilitation of the sufferers of the disease, with the balance to be sent to the national committee for the purpose of scientific research work.

The attractive decorative scheme elicited many comments. American flags and bunting in the national colors were effectively placed, and at the front of the hall were large letters forming the words "Our President's Birthday."

A floor show in three acts was very well received, these including a tap dancer, a male vocalist, and a singing hostess, Hubert McGinley was chairman of the entertainment committee.

"We Live Again" Gives A
Fine Role to Anna Sten

Samuel Goldwyn's presentation of "We Live Again," starring Anna Sten and Fredric March, begins a two-day run at the Grand Theatre tonight.

Directed by Rouben Mamoulian, the picture tells in vivid and dramatic fashion the powerful and beautiful love story of the little Russian peasant girl, Katusha, who loved and was betrayed by a Prince.

Years later they meet again, Prince Dmitri as a member of the jury trying Katusha, who has become a girl of the streets, for poisoning and robbing a man. When, through a misunderstanding, she is sentenced to five years in Siberia, despite her innocence, the remorseful nobleman gives up his life of ease to make amends for the great wrong he has done her.

Jane Baxter, the lovely English actress, plays the aristocratic fiancée whom Dmitri leaves to follow Katusha to Siberia, while C. Aubrey Smith is importantly cast as her father, Prince Korchagin.

ARREST TWO BOYS AND SOLVE ANOTHER ROBBERY

Admit Thefts at the Bowling
Alley of Francis J.
O'Boyle

TOOK $15 IN GOODS

Another robbery has been solved by the police and it resulted in the arrest yesterday of two boys who after being questioned by Chief Jones admitted their guilt.

The youths arrested are:

Elmer Clark, 18, 333 Jackson street.

Edward Bailey, 17, 328 Jackson street.

The youths were taken into custody yesterday on suspicion of being implicated in the robbery of the pool room and bowling alley of Francis J. O'Boyle, Farragut avenue and Monroe street.

The O'Boyle place was entered on December 4th, last year, and cigars, cigarettes and candy were taken to the value of about $15. The robbery was reported to the police who have been quietly investigating the case and the arrests of yesterday resulted.

Handwriting of one of the youths played a big part in their capture, although no handwriting experts were brought into the case.

At the time of the report of the O'Boyle robbery police found written in chalk on one of the show cases "Baby Face Nelson." A photograph of the writing was taken and when Clark was placed under arrest and taken to police headquarters he was confronted with this picture. He readily admitted it was his handwriting and then confessed his implication in the robbery.

Both boys after admitting their guilt were given a hearing before Justice of Peace James Guy, today, and both were held for court.

This makes four youths arrested by the police since January 15th and the four have admitted 18 robberies which were committed here during last year.

The other two under arrest are Rosario Caro, 17, 822 Jefferson avenue, and James Manzo, 17, 715 Fifth avenue, who was brought back from a CCC camp at Renovo, Clinton County, by Chief Jones.

ADVISORY MASTER IN DIVORCE CASE GIVES SCATHING REBUKE

New Jersey Official, However,
Grants Former Bristol
Man Divorce

WIFE LIVED IN CROYDON

Custody of Three-Year-Old Son is Awarded to Father

(By International News Service)

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 31.—A scathing judicial denunciation of John J. McGuckin, former police chief of Bristol, Pa., and his wife, Edna, was on record in Chancery Court here today in connection with the recommendation that a divorce be granted to William H. Cloud, 57-year-old Palmyra, N. J., fruit produce manufacturer, against Mrs. Viola Cloud, Croydon, Pa.

In recommending the divorce be granted following a two-day hearing, Advisory Master in Chancery, William J. Kraft, characterized McGuckin and his wife, who now make their home in Pensauken, and work together as private detectives, as "persons of the basest sort."

It was on the basis of testimony given by McGuckin and his wife that the recommendation of a divorce decree, be issued.

The former Bristol police chief and Mrs. McGuckin were retained by Cloud to obtain divorce evidence against his wife. At the close of the hearing yesterday, Mrs. Cloud shrieked hysterical condemnation of her husband, but court attaches quieted her down and led her out of the court room.

Custody of Norman Cloud, three-year-old son of the couple, was awarded to the father, but Mrs. Cloud was accorded the unlimited right to visit the boy in New Jersey.

In making the recommendation for the divorce, Advisory Master Kraft said he based his ruling on testimony that Mrs. Cloud was intimate with Joseph Lamina of Croydon, one of the seven men named by the complaining husband in charges of infidelity involving his wife.

Advisory Master Kraft in recommending the decree for Cloud on the grounds she was intimate with Lamina, said the conduct of Mr. Cloud did not appeal to him, however. "Both of the detectives, Mr. and Mrs. McGuckin, are persons of the basest sort when they would stoop to furnish a man to compromise for the woman. I place little credence in their testimony. They entrapped, enticed and lured a married woman, and even went so far as to furnish a paramour. They are not worthy of respect."

Just before the decision was made known, LeRoy Barker, 12-year-old son of Mrs. Cloud by a former marriage, went on the witness stand to defend his mother. He testified that while several men called at his mother's home in Croydon, they never were out of his sight. He said his mother instructed him never to leave the house while any men visitors were there.

SWEDEN PROSPERS

King Gustaf, of Sweden, in his annual message at the opening of the Swedish parliament, gave the country's lawmakers some assurances that must have been the envy of those responsible for government elsewhere in the world. He said the budget had been balanced without increase of taxes and without floating large public loans.

Also the king said that during the year there had been a reduction in the public debt of 40,000,000 crowns (about $10,000,000), which is a considerable cut seeing that the total debt of the nation is only about $590,000,000. The greater part of this debt was incurred three years ago and went to pay for a program of public works for productive purposes.

The king asked for a considerably smaller appropriation for unemployment relief, explaining that unemployment was rapidly disappearing. The total unemployment in the country is now but little over one per cent of the population.

It will be remembered that Sweden was one of the nations that had the good sense to keep out of the World War.

TWAIN IS HONORED

Mark Twain on the 100th anniversary of his birth was honored in a way which his Shade, wherever it may be, must have keenly appreciated.

Dignitaries of Missouri assembled in Hannibal. They consumed a banquet, heard addresses by the Governor and the president of the Historical Society, put on a radio broadcast, and dedicated a memorial lighthouse overlooking the Mississippi River.

It was in connection with this last event that the most impressive ceremony took place. At a certain moment the lighthouse had to be illuminated.

In far away Washington President Roosevelt suspended briefly his pressing public duties, leaned forward and touched a button which did the illuminating. Everyone in Hannibal was appropriately thrilled—the more so because the button, as they had been informed, was of gold.

The President then immediately turned back to his pressing public duties.

We imagine that the great humorist, who often disregarded the more serious aspects of solemn occasions, might have got a small ironical chuckle out of this.

"THE LADY DANCES" by MARGE STANLEY

CHAPTER XX

He ascended the stairs to the upper hall. A dim light arched beneath the door of a room half-way down the corridor that must of necessity be Vanya's quarters, since the other two girls were still downstairs. Shene's room was on the ground floor, and Hong slept, if he slept at all, Heaven knew where. He paused at the door; probably had no more luck than his own, he thought.

"Trial by Fire!" he murmured, and rapped sharply on the panel.

"Yes?" called a voice—Vanya's voice!

He deliberately turned the knob; the door gave and he stepped in. Vanya looked up in startled surprise as he closed the door behind him. He glanced about the room, very similar, save for the single window, to his own—furnished with a narrow bed, a single straight chair, a bureau with a mirror, and a wooden wash-stand with a pitcher and basin. Vanya sat on the bed, with the long evening gown she had worn the preceding night crumpled in her lap; she was apparently mending it. The single chair was bedecked with a scanty litter of other clothes.

The girl, as she stared wide-eyed at Mark's unceremonious entrance, still wore the tattered costume of her last dance; in the room's heat she had discarded the flowered robe, he suddenly advanced a step, swung his arm about her waist, and pressed his lips against her full, pouting ones!

Vanya neither screamed nor struggled; nor did she yield; her body was pressed rigidly against his by his arm, but her soft lips, except for their warmth, were as unresponsive as those of a stone statue. A moment only Mark held her, then he released her. She pressed her fingers across her lips and backed slowly away from him, sinking to the bed with her eyes fixed dazedly on his face.

"Well," said Mark, "why don't you call for help? Why don't you scream?"

"Scream?" said the girl dully. "Who'd come? Your friend Loring? Or Hong? Or Pearly Shene? Aren't you a paying guest?"

She tried to shift the rage to cover her bare white knees. Mark made no answer to her words, but seated himself on the bed beside her. Suddenly he again drew her to him, bending her back across his knees; he leaned forward and once more pressed his lips to hers.

There was a violence in this second kiss that he had hardly intended; he was suddenly involved in his own plan in a manner somewhat unexpected. Vanya was rigid and unyielding in his arms, but somehow Mark felt, or thought he felt, a change in her. Then suddenly she was struggling, twisting, writhing in an attempt to escape from the circle of his arms. He withdrew his lips, and she lay motionless, her eyes closed, and her breath sounding in little gasps.

"Why don't you scream?" Mark repeated.

"Please," she said in a low voice. "Please—let me go."

By way of answer, Mark cupped his great brown hand beneath her chin, and holding her firmly against his struggles, kissed her again. And in the midst of this procedure, she ceased to struggle; she was passive in his embrace, and a curious and unexpected thrill moved in Mark's own being.

Had she responded? Had he imagined a scarcely perceptible flutter of the warm lips? He wondered.

for no one, except clever Loring, could have read the real reason for Vanya's hauteur and coldness to him—that her attitude was a mechanism of defense against the love she feared. Out of the bitter circumstances of her life had grown the distrust of men that led her to erect her shield of disdain, and from her first meeting with Mark had come the fear of the very thing that was now occurring to her. Her defense was cracking, and even though Mark could not know her feelings, he sensed enough to do no more than repeat his kiss with added forcefulness.

This time he was certain! This time he felt her response. And still she lay passive and unresisting in his arms, with those dusky eyes of hers now gazing seriously into his own! Again he kissed her, with an ardor that was quickly outworn by that carefully engineered plan with which he entered the room.

He recalled himself. This wouldn't do! Not while the Trial by Fire remained to be given. But the warm throbs of the girl's half-revealed body, the silky feel of her black hair on his arm—He pressed one final kiss on her now responsive lips, while her arm slipped softly over his shoulder and drew him still closer.

He placed her upright on the bed, and stood erect. Vanya sat with her face buried in her hands, her ebony hair cascading across her bare arms.

"You didn't scream," said Mark in a half-choked voice, "because you didn't want to!"

She made no answer, but raised her head until the dark eyes met his. She looked at him with a serious, frightened, puzzled face; Mark had to steel himself to continue his desecrated course.

"Will you deny that?" he muttered, wondering how to proceed.

Vanya shook her head silently, with her puzzled eyes still fixed on his. Mark, for his part, was himself more or less at a loss; though he had burst in upon the girl determined to carry through his plan, yet he had bewildered, half-reluctant yielding to him seemed entirely at variance with the attitude he might have expected. Still, he told himself, what of it? He was here with a definite purpose; he was going through with it.

A burst of sound from below interrupted the progress of Mark's plans. There came a racket of shouts and a crashing of chairs and tables—Shene's bellow, sailors' shouts, and keening through the hubbub, a familiar voice raised in song!

"I sing a song
Of men unclean,
To Ho Li Hong
And Pearly Shene!
Their liquor's strong,
And so's their smell!
So send them both along
To Hell!"

"Oh!" said Vanya, passing her hand dazedly through her black hair. "Again—now! I can't stand this!"

The hullabaloo rose to a crescendo of shouts, shouts, rending wood, and crashing glasses. Loring's song shrieked again above the brawl.

"For decent men
Will hardly seek
The filthy pen
Where such men reek!
For Hong is fat
And Shene is big—
But Shene's a rat,
And Hong's a pig!"

Mark heard Vanya's distracted murmur, still missing the hysteria in her voice.

"Oh God!" she whispered. "No more of it!"

The fracas broke into the open; Mark saw from the window the group of sailors, Loring in their midst, stagger toward the beach. And a final fragmentary melody floated back.

"Let long, cool swells
Of ocean heave
Wash out the smells
Of Hong and Shene."

A voice faded. Mark turned again to the pale face and haunted eyes of Vanya.

"I've got to leave," she said, "or go mad!"

Mark perceived his chance—the opportunity to further his plans. "Leave?" he said. "Where? Singapore? Canton, Harbin? Or Saigon or Shanghai? I'll give you passage money, if they're better than this."

"But I have a plan," he continued, noting the girl's shudder. "I'm not proposing marriage, but I can slip you into the United States—as my wife. Get you past the immigration people. You'd like to enter the States, wouldn't you? Clean cities, cultured people, wealth—you know the details!"

Vanya still looked up at him with that hopeless, silent gaze.

"I'll be fair," said Mark. "I won't collect until I deliver. The mail packet leaves Tsoulanga for Honolulu in about three weeks; we'll sail on that as a married couple. Once in the States, you belong to yourself; until we dock at Prisco, you are my wife. There's my offer; yes or no?"

Mark stared down into the dark eyes.

"There it is!" he thought. "Trial by Fire—and I hope to Heaven she slaps my face!"

But she didn't. She just gazed at him with the same dazed, hopeless expression, and then closed her eyes and sobbed quietly.

"Looks like a typhoon passed through the bar!" said Mark to Loring, as the latter sat munching his morning quota of bananas and breadfruit. The hullabaloo showed some effects of the evening's fracas; his lower lip bore a ragged cut, and his eyes were more or less usually red-rimmed. His unkempt beard concealed any other damages his face might have suffered.

"Good party!" replied Loring. "Must have been, for I've had the only headache I've acquired for several years. . . . Though that might have been the bottle itself instead of its contents!"

"Hong looked normal this morning."

"He should; the pig ducked out when the excitement started."

"What happened?"

"Couldn't say," grinned Loring. "Just began, I suppose. These little affairs have a habit of starting when I get spiffed around Hong or Shene. Just a minor peculiarity of mine!"

"At that," said Mark, "you and your friends appeared to come off second best, from what little I saw of the affair."

"That Shene!" said the beachcomber with distaste. "He did in the five of us; took most of it out on me, of course; he was really very gentle with the paying customers."

Mark stared out to where the Ellice was slowly rounding the last curve of Tongatabu. It sailed jauntily, with full sail spread to the mild Trade Wind, notwithstanding the fact that a good portion of the small crew must have been feeling their two-days' dissipation.

"There goes Shene's clientele," he observed. "No show tonight."

"Oh, the lady will have a free evening, if that's what you mean," replied Loring. "And by the way, did I win that quart?"

"You did not!" snapped Mark.

He strolled away, leaving Loring gazing after him with an expression of mingled amusement and regret. He did not heed the beachcomber's sarcastic call.

"There's also a Trial by Combat!" came Loring's irrepressible voice. "I'll wager another quart of that!"

REMODEL-REDECORATE-MODERNIZE

THE BETTER HOUSING PROGRAM of the Federal Housing Administration has cleared the path for all of us to repair run-down homes, and make good homes better! You've been reading a lot about the plan in the papers. Now put it to work:

How Does It Work?

- (1) You own a house or a building. It needs countless things to make it more livable, more rentable, more salable. You need these modernizations—but you haven't quite been able to swing it.
- (2) Go to any national bank, state bank or trust company—industrial bank—building and loan association—or finance company—approved by the Federal Housing Administration. Explain what

ESTIMATE FROM THIS LIST — THEN APPLY FOR YOUR LOAN

ORDERLY SUBURBAN EXPANSION IS THE AIM IN INSURING MORTGAGES

The Federal Housing Administration, making public recently a circular on insurance of mortgages on homes located in subdivisions, has reiterated its policy of cultivating home building and community planning in keeping with the highest standards of modern housing in America.

In extending its mutual mortgage insurance program to neighborhood developments, the Federal Housing Administration makes it plain that it will not encourage by insurance the making of mortgages on property located in areas doomed to decline in desirability, or where dwelling projects will "burden the city with costs of a meaningless dispersion of services and population."

On the other hand, the Administration will favor the development of satisfactory, stable neighborhoods and encourage orderly expansion of the urban pattern.

Due to the surplus of undeveloped or partially developed subdivisions existing in the country today, the economic soundness of building up new urban areas at this time is questionable, the Federal Housing Administration points out.

"There is generally an enormous excess of subdivided lots in this country over the number for which absorption might reasonably be anticipated in the next few decades," the Administration says in its instructions to insuring offices.

"Only the soundest new neighborhoods can compete successfully and be built up completely. Only by the process of abandoning those areas which are plainly superfluous or premature, by consistently developing those which are ripe for use, and by regulating the number of additional lots placed on the market may the present chaotic situation be reduced to order, and possibilities of achieving security for needed new neighborhoods be realized."

The policy of the Federal Housing Administration will be to take cognizance of any condition which produces unusual risk in real estate investment and mortgage lending, but at the same time not stand in the way of new construction and of desirable urban expansion. The Federal Housing Administration is prepared to assist in the development of areas which both are needed to care for increasing population or changing modes of living, and are so located and planned as to offer the prospect of continuing desirability for residential purposes.

work you want done. State the cost. Ask for a loan of from $100 to $2000 for housing improvement. Sign a loan application. (The loan will then be considered on the basis of the application statement and the "character" of the applicant.) Repayments are to be made in periodic installments. An insurance arrangement between the Government and the approved lending institutions has made this plan possible.

This, in very brief, is the plan. A simple plan—daring in conception, and of tremendous importance to Recovery. It is estimated that one billion six hundred million dollars is necessary to put 16,000,000 buildings back into good condition. The Government has opened the door to this accomplishment.

Standards to be set up by the Federal Housing Administration in this connection will not be intended to regulate subdividing throughout the country, nor to control the pattern of land development, but rather to insist upon the observance of rational principles of development in those areas in which insured mortgages are desired.

The circular sets forth certain minimum requirements which the subdivision must meet before homes erected therein may be eligible for mutual mortgage insurance under the Federal Housing Administration plan. The Administration will take into careful consideration the probable future of the community's development in this connection. In addition, the general neighborhood must be up to standard with respect to geographical location, conformity to city plan, zoning regulations, deed restrictions, accessibility, availability of utilities, etc.

Certain other desirable standards are recommended but the Federal Housing Administration points out that they are not laid down as inflexible conditions for mortgage insurance. They include adjustment of sub-division layouts to the topography of the locality; advantage taken of natural features; condition of streets, curbs, walks, curves and grades; plantings, such as trees on all streets; length of blocks and lot dimensions and general planning of the sub-division as a unit.

PAINTING ELIMINATES HOUSEHOLD VERMIN

Paint minimizes the danger of damage by insects and vermin. A fresh coat of light-colored paint in clothes closets, linen closets and other poorly lighted parts of the home deters moths, ants, spiders, mice and other household vermin from emerging from dark places, and putty, paint and varnish fill up their hiding places. Surface protection should also be given floors and all portions of the home where cracks and crevices occur.

Modernizing a home through decorating, which includes the protective features of varnish, paint and paint materials, may be done through modernization loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

WASHABLE PAPERS AVAILABLE FOR WALLS

Waterproof wallpaper that can be washed with soap and water is reported by interior decorators to be boosting sales of this material.

Advantages of a washable wall covering are obvious for the bathroom, kitchen and playroom. But motion picture theatres have discovered its value for lobbies, hallways, and rest rooms, while churches also have found it suitable especially for their social parlors. Use of this type of wallpaper is not confined, however, to places where washability is a prime consideration. It is available in many attractive patterns, and its long life makes its purchase an economical investment for general use in the home, theatre, church, or elsewhere.

Automatic Heat Control

Ease in controlling the heating unit can usually be obtained by installing an automatic feeding device, thermostat, humidifier and other devices. These modern improvements, which are being installed in homes through modernization loans obtained under the terms of the Federal Housing Administration, eliminate much manual labor in homes.

An effective way of lowering fuel bills when modernizing a building is to remove a piece of the sliding ceiling height of each story and fill up the hollow spaces in the by blowing rock wool into through a pneumatic hose.
